Quote on the Purpose of Drawing, written on the back of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal Newsletter, January, 1952. (See - Art Ed. Pamphlets and papers). Original in own hand.

"Of the senses, the sense of vision is the most useful to the mind -: drawing of all lessons trains the eye (and the hands) as nothing else can. To have an eye trained to observe to criticize, to compare - to be accurate to be quick. To have hands trained to be free sure & skillful: to have a mind trained in this way to seize upon the interest, & character beauty of any surroundings to be able to convey the facts of one's own sight of the material world critically & with feeling - to discover the positive values of order, accuracy, patience & proportion - these are the things that the practice of drawing will undoubtedly implant upon, encourage in a child. They are major advantages that apply to life in general - they are not extras. -"
